Konya Is City of Original Whirling Dervishes, Report

Torrance City Councilman J. A. (Jay) Beasley met with Altemur Kilic, press attache to the Turkish Embassy in Washington Sunday to discuss Torrance's people-to-people project with Konya, Turkey.

Kilic expressed deep gratitude to the residents of Torrance for selecting the historic city of Konya as its across-the-sea-sister.

During conversation at the National Press Club, Kilic said: "It seems to me that Torrance is the kind of a city where I would like to live."

Beasley and the Turkish government spokesman then discussed the project in a tape-recorded interview. Both men agreed that two things can be done immediately: Torrance can provide some industrial and business know-how for Konya—which is also stressing industrial development while retaining its historic background. Secondly, school children can exchange letters with the objective of learning about each other's cities.

An exchange of official delegates is hoped for in the future. Kilic made this point: Konya, while pushing modern industry, particularly in textiles, carpets and other manufacturing, also takes pride in the fact that it is the original city of the whirling Dervishes. It has many shrines and is a tourist city and a pilgrimage center.

The Turkish representative said he had already heard that Torrance won the honor of "All American City," and expressed pleasure that Konya has a model metropolitan center as its US "sister."
